WORLD PEACE

AISHA TARANG
School of Allied Medicine
Universidad De Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

An idea of earthly, non-violence of which nations willingly cooperate, either by virtue or voluntarily of the governance that prevents warfare. A "PEACE" imposed by an imperialist power controlling the masses for its own benefit is no peace. The Eastern bloc and the Capitalist camp both say they want a world system: but they cannot agree on its own shape. Both err in thinking that economics is the sole cause of divisions, and in believing that economic measures will by themselves suffice to eradicate conflicts and substitute peace. People must be free to think what they will as they will, and to weigh all possibilities.

World peace is sometimes claimed to be the inevitable result of a certain political ideology. The solution is not so much based on agreed agenda, or an investment in higher authority whether divine or political, but rather a self-organized network of mutually supportive mechanisms, resulting in a viable politico-economic social fabric. Though however that war is not innate part of a human nature and that this myth in fact prevents people from reaching for world peace.