

Talk without action is wrong.

"Protest is when I say I don't agree with something. Resistance is when I ensure that things I don't agree with never happen again."

-The Baader Meinhof Complex-

I always say that I'm not going to let myself be dragged back into politics, yet somehow I always drag my ass right back into the heat of things. So this is my declaration to all of you: I will be enforcing radical political thought on this blog from now on. You have been warned.

This is what I've seen: a world torn apart and injured greatly by greed, an endless war that has turned America into the terrorists we so adamantly despise, prisons filled to the brim with those we once fought to protect, and a slowly withering environmental climate due to our own carelessness. Human kind will destroy this planet one day- that is the logical consequence, it is inevitable. I do not believe otherwise. Human kind has not proved me otherwise.

It would be wise to ask, what can one do? What I'd rather answer is what is one doing? Sitting behind a computer screen ranting and raving on about social change and how Obama is the greatest pussy leader the world has seen. (I always laugh at the people who say Obama is a socialist radical because if he really was he wouldn't be trying to win over the Republicans by kissing their ass. The health care reform would have passed as it should have passed when it was first written, but now it is just a sorry excuse for a joke of what it once was. I'm sorry but Mr. President you are a fucking pussy.) Every idiot who knows how to use a computer is filling the internet to bursting capacity with talk talk talk. Yet no one is doing a goddamn thing. This is what I hate about today's world. Everyone is full of high emotion on the internet but in reality everyone is apathetic.

Just because one has voiced their opinion on a hair's width of the great world wide web they think that's enough and call it a day. Well bravo! Another opinion out in the open.

We all protest and protest, yet there is no resistance. There is no revolution. We rely instead on some elected official and then bitch when they don't do shit. And you know why they don't do shit? Because they can't. This isn't a free society, this is a prison industrial complex built on capitalism and religion- the wealthy control everything and they are the ones moving the money under the table and bending the law to their whim. All the while middle-America is clouded in their own bile of ignorance.

Of course I'm not saying go out and become an anarchist or terrorist or do a Baador Meinhof. What I am saying is go outside and change people's minds but do it creatively and with less talk and more action. You want cars to go out of fashion? Plant fucking trees in the middle of the road! You want to stop BP? Stop using oil! Invent things and hand them out that are alternatives to oil. DO things that insight THINKING and real change.

I highly doubt anyone will though.

Why?

Because we are fed till our little bellies are full and given plastic credit to spend so we can remain blind. In the real world, outside of this bubble internet, everyone is a slave to the comforts of capitalism and materialism. And if we weren't we might actually realize we have to do something because only then would we gain true awareness. Sometimes we manage a glimpse when plugged in to our glowing screens but once unplugged we are walking zombies. We have created this mess, not the banks or congress, but the people of this so highly idolized democracy. WE have destroyed the present and WE are destroying the future.

The world is falling apart at the seams at this very moment, but no one really cares. Talk runs like wild fire, protesting through voices that are voiceless, and all this protesting is getting us nowhere. No one is physically doing something about it. Action, real resistance now that is what we need.

But then again, I'm just another useless blogger. What would I know?
