

We as human beings are very fortunate to be living on this planet that we call Earth. We toil over the land, and in return we receive provisions off of which we live. Even though we get all that we need from this bountiful land, we still for some reason feel like we need to alter it. In doing so we also end up ruining the land that we thrive on. We reshape the world to fit our individual needs, and the earth just doesn't work that way. Everything on this planet has a purpose, from the largest animal to the microscopic bacteria, and without it, it is impossible to live in harmony. If we try and wipe out a species of animal just because it "gets in our way" is not the way to live. We as humans are destroying the earth and in doing so we are ruining the ability to live harmoniously with our fellow inhabitants.

As we look over the televisions, newspapers, internet almost everyday we read about nature destruction and in return our nature is giving back what we have done. Strong earthquake destroy this place leaving many people nowhere to go, typhoons making people homeless. Are we not aware of these calamities? If we will not start now preserving our nature, when will that be? Let us be selfless and think for the future, what can we give to our future generation if we will all destroy it now..

Once we all as humans start thinking in this fashion we will not need to worry about the Earth not being able to provide for us in the future.
