

I believe all mankind are born equal. However, this is not true in our World. Where one is born seems to dictate the set of opportunities one has in life. Being born in the under-developed part of the world often means a hard life with limited opportunities. Only very few can rise above the poverty, disease and corruption often found in their countries to make progress.

It looks to me those of us who are privileged to have the power of choice to work for a better life has to help those less fortunate. In my mind, Education is the key to eradicate Poverty once the basic human needs of food and shelter is met. We can help with the basics to arm those in need with the tool to improve their life. The world, after all belongs to all mankind and not just the "richer" countries. The power to choose a better life is a right we all have.

I urge all to take the various international organization, such as the UN to heart and work with them towards improving the plight of all world citizens, starting with the less privileged. Monetary donation is a start, but your ideas and time and care would be even better.
