War is not peace. Without peace, the world will be in chaos. With peace, the world will become a better place for everyone. To achieve this, we have to start small. Instead of world peace at once throughout all the countries, peace should be started at the basis of children's learning experiences such as the Cupertino Cultural and Education Camp. By providing the examples of peaceful role models, the campers can learn from their elderly to become a better person of the future. Even in the public schools, I believe peace should be emphasized so that they will easily be surrounded by the best for the world. This can easily make the world better with everyone. Starting small then to work your way up may be the easiest way to gain world peace. The next step would to create organizational peace institutions exactly to create peace. These institutions would make order for the better. In the future, peace can be obtained for everyone at all ages including children, teenagers, and adults. The future generations can then enjoy their peaceful lives due to our generations' hard work today. If we can start today, we can begin making progress towards our goal for world peace. These things may be implemented to society.
