

Ian Chou

Lynbrook High School / 10th grade

legoian@gmail.com

Mother Nature

It's all over the news, TV, websites. People are always talking about protecting and restoring nature. Scientists and many other people agree that humans are destroying nature. But they are forgetting about one thing. Are humans not part of nature too? We yammer endlessly about how humans are destroying nature. That is correct, but, humans are a part of it too. So if you put it all together we are saying this: if we all agree that we are destroying nature, it means we are destroying ourselves too. So if we all work together to save nature, we are all, in theory, saving ourselves too.

There are many things that we humans can do starting from recycling, reusing, and not wasting resources. If we keep up this pace, the world would eventually turn into one depicted in many movies, such as Wall-e. To those of the people who have seen it, you've seen the mountains of trash, piled one on top of another. By simply recycling, we can easily reduce the number of waste ending up in a landfill. This way, we can save nature and also, save ourselves too.

To sum it all up, recycling, reusing, and not wasting resources can be and is something we can all do. It's really not that hard. A little help can make a difference. And if everyone pitches in, then we can all save Mother Nature (including ourselves) and enjoy a better life on earth.