

Name: Huey Long

Country: USA

Organization: NA

Solution: NA

Self Truth

I tend to enjoy to some degree, the outrageousness that is my life.

To some degree.

It isn't that I am immature, overly rowdy, disrespectful, or turbulent.. I'd like to call it "passionate" towards the ability to live my life, my way. My entire life, I've been told of all the things that would ruin my life. I was disciplined by my teachers, and told by them among other distant members of my family, that I would be a nobody if I didn't get the best grades.

So, in middle school, I made it a point to get an "F" and "I".

The entire theme of my life, has been continuously circular around this one concept; You will NOT define me. I don't have a fear of not being accepted by people whom don't understand me-slash-share my dreams and ambitions-slash-understand my need to grow or are able to help me achieve mental expansion. Truth be told, I've never saw the point in pretending. Pretending as if I really cared about the opinions of those who guise their fear-based, derogatory statements underneath the label of "constructive criticism".

- I don't live to find some woman who will cook and clean and do all the house chores.. Ironic; in the environment I grew up in, it was next to non-existent anyway, and things have only gotten "worse" as society has begun to balance the equilibrium. I don't want a trophy-wife, I want a partner. Someone who's as much of an individual as I am.

- I don't care about being rich. To be honest, I rarely care about money. Anytime I've considered making decisions based on frugality, I've only disappointed myself, and failed miserably. Considering anything outside of seeking to be in a position that allows me to further delve into and develop my abilities, is pointless.

- Massive amounts of material possessions, have only made me a lenient lender. You want to see what you're REALLY capable of? Ditch everything you don't need, and start off fresh. I feel at my best, when I feel I have nothing. There's a rush that comes from relying on everything you KNOW, and not everything you HAVE. I only become depressed when I think about what I have; it leads to thinking of what I don't, which leads down a depressing path I choose not to tread.

I will be reliant on myself. Though I've gotten both the highest and lowest of grades while in school, grades do not prove intelligence. They prove the presence of fear in the individual. The fear of not being accepted, of not being 'worth' the same as other people whose 'value' you aren't able to access anyway. In no way am I saying not to do your best... What I am saying, is never to be afraid of being yourself, no matter who or what or where you are.

Source: <http://simply-cynical.xanga.com/>