

“Child Protection”

Aubin, Mae Ann R.
School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City

Child protection is the ability to help children who doesn't have their family, who's living in the street and the parents who abandon their children and otherwise the parents who's hurting their child. The children who doesn't have their family that's the time we will help them, not actually at the time but every day we see children, because if we don't have a pity on the child who abandon their parents there are the one who is sacrificing and the otherwise there is children living on the street who don't have their family or home.

We can help them, put in the shelter with sisters. We can protect children by helping them give shelter were not using we can give them and a small amount to buy food.

The children who doesn't have their family we can help them without some consideration of others, help and protect children for them to be in other way to be comfortable in any abandons and hurts that they will cause and get from their parents or step parents. That's the way of being good children save and protect children.