Human rights as modern law, this law can help the civilian people to protect them from crimes, from people who are corrupt. I call it modern, because in the past years human rights are not that elaborated. Like for example, during the Martial Law, many people have died. They were killed without any reasons. If you are suspected that you are against the government, helping the lefties, you will be killed. Families of the victims during the Martial Law can't do anything. Human rights were taken for granted.

Human rights: the right of people to talk, the right of people to refuse, and the right of a person accused to remain silent. These are just some of the rights stated in the constitution. Human rights in our country are practiced nowadays. You can see people rallying to show their sentiments. You can see children being rescued from people that they were maltreated. There are people filing cases to other people because they were abused in one way or the other.
