

Human Right and Peace

Aliana S.Reyes

School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

What is the relationship between human right and peace? Human rights and peace comes along with each other so that we can have a productive society.

We should consider every individual right; we should always take consideration human rights above all. First, because we are human and the important thing is we interact and do things with other people. If we will not consider their rights and our rights there is the tendency that violence will occur. We fight violence to achieve peace; achieving peace is not a easy thing because it is complicated. Every individual has their own opinion and this different opinion can lead to misunderstanding and conflict. But if we are respecting each individual right and open our heart to understanding it is not impossible to attain peace, and it is not impossible to live in a productive society. Human rights are the groundwork of peace for that reason we should protect, manifest and prove that it really exists.

Leaving in a life with peace and harmony is great. So now on we should do things to achieve it. We should respect other people and avoid conflict. Change for the good and it should start within us.