

HUMAN RIGHTS

Allein John D. Fabor
BS Criminology
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

Human rights, these are laws from our government given to every citizen, stating the rights of each individual. The right to protect oneself from wrong-doers; the right to protect one's dignity; these are some examples of human rights.

When we speak of human rights, poor people come in my mind. Why is it there are so many victims of child abuse? Why is it women are usually the victims of maltreatment? Because of poverty, children would sort to going to work at a young age, just to be able to support their family. Women would choose to go to prostitution to support themselves. Is this how government protect their people? It is a good thing that people nowadays are more vigilant with their rights. since the government can't protect the people, there are private sectors or individuals that cater and help the victims of abuses.

With the new administration in our leadership, I hope and pray that there would be peace and order in our country. Especially, they will protect and uphold the welfare of every citizen they serve.