What is Human Rights? Human rights are rights and freedoms of every person, regardless of his gender, age, and beliefs. These are given freely to everyone as being a human.

Every person living in this world has their human rights. Human rights can serve as protection against crimes. If a person committed a crime he can be imprisoned by such action. If a suspect is not yet charged of the crime, it's his right that he can defend his self unless proven guilty. The human rights must be presented in a work the same substantial condition as it was at the time of the offense and the ultimate disposition of the case should be kept to a minimum.
