

Human Rights
Opialda, Michael Glenn
Criminology
Universidad de Zamboanga

Human rights have been a subject of concern a controversy. According to U.S country profile on the Philippine dated March 2006, the U.S state department reported in 2006 that Philippines security forces have been responsible for serious human right abuses despite the effort of civilian authorities to control them. The report found that although the government generally respected human rights, some security forces elements particularly the Philippine national police practiced extrajudicial killings, vigilantism disappearances, torture and arbitrary arrest and detention in their battle against criminals and terrorist prison conditions were harsh, and the slow judicial process as well as corrupt police, judges and prosecutor impaled due process and the rule of law. Besides criminal and terrorist human rights activity, left wings political activist and Muslim and abuse of children remained problem, and some children were presses into slave labor and prostitution. I hope my simple article., will change even not now but maybe in the future.