Police Brutality

Police brutality is one way to discipline criminals for them to force to tell the truth. This action has a good and a bad side. The good side is criminals will be disciplined and think to change their ways. But the bad side of it is that they are being abused by the police officers. Even criminals have their rights.

Victims of police brutality can charge them, file case against them, and if found guilty, they can be discharged from their work. But let's admit it, there are still policemen who are still abusing their power. This has affected much of the reputation of the police force in our country. Nowadays, there are little trust given to policemen because of these things happened in the past. Victims of such wrong doing sometimes don't know their rights. They just let these policemen do what they want to do to them.
