Peace and human rights means are almost the same just like parallel lines because in the name of human rights there are so many rules to follow. One can't judge other people actions because the true character of a person cannot be determined through external features only. Even convicted individuals cannot be generalized. If human rights shall be applied, the convicts still have the right to uphold their dignity and defend themselves for certain grounds. However, many are abusive nowadays. Especially people seating in the higher position in the government system or influential people who can makes use of money to settle things favorable to them, leaving the underprivileged and underserved miserable.

In an organization, one common form of abuse is the making of decision without consulting other member of the system. In a cooperative, for instance, decisions must be consensual. Human right is about the right of different people either rich or poor, each person has a right to defend themselves in a right/nice way without hurting anyone, No one can force you to believe others and you can't force others to believe you because we are different in terms of beliefs, attitudes. But we are still human we have a right to fight for our dignity and it can't be bought.

In terms of rights we can't just put the law in our hands. We can't just torture people to have a fun with. Many people find happiness in torturing others. We have the right to live in one place, the right to choose whom to live with and where, the right to decide on your own without the command of others.

We can learn peace in the house to have a harmony. Through this we can be calm, peaceful, so we can think nice, without worrying the words coming out from our mouth. By this we can have a peaceful mind and confidence. Peace must begin with each one of us so there will be no war in this world, where people unite to be as one and to have one mind is to have a peaceful surrounding in world we live. Hence, true happiness is at hand.
