

PEACE AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Audie John T. Mejia
Computer Science Department
Universidad de Zamboanga-Ipil
Zamboanga Sibugay Province, Philippines

Peace is best described in a relationship with no violence observing equality and human rights of each individual living in this planet. Peace should not be described only as the absence of war or conflict. It can also mean discontentment. Driven by greed, most people tend to be disturbed or troubled because they could find peace within themselves. As peace should spring from within us, contentment must be also experience by one person in order to have peace of mind. Oftentimes, greedy people cause troubles that eventually lead to massive social encounters. This often results to human rights violation because many people cannot control their temper and consequently hurt or put the lives of other people in peril.

To attain peace, let's open our hearts to the cries of people suffering because of the failures and deception caused by political leaders. Let the minor express their feelings. Let the hungry take part in the local economy progress. Let us be united to bring our nation into the road of success. Let our kind hearts and open minds rule over evil thoughts.