

PEACE AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Dennis R. Muyargas
Computer Engineering Department
Universidad de Zamboanga-Ipil
Zamboanga Sibugay Province, Philippines

Peace, as they say, is a cornerstone of progress. Without peace, there will be no social and economic stability in the country. Peace and human rights must be coupled in order to achieve both because by attaining peace there should respect to human rights and in respecting human rights, peace is achievable.

Violation of human rights is often the cause of conflict. When a certain individual or group individual is denied of particular rights, uprising is often the consequences and such cases usually end up in chaos. Thus, peace has no place in chaos.

Promotion of peace need not be too theoretical or bounded by thousand of policies. One individual can spur peace by being peaceful himself. Influencing others may be very effective if one can see the peacefulness in the promoter.