

PEACE AND HUMAN RIGHTS

Frank Gregory B. Espirirtu
Computer Engineering Department
Universidad de Zamboanga-Ipil
Zamboanga Sibugay Province, Philippines

Human right does not mean putting the law in your hands. As citizen of this country, we are all obliged to abide with the constitution and prevailing laws and policies designed for orderliness. Orderliness can serve as flint of peace. One may experience less conflict when acquiring licenses in an agency with orderly and systematic procedures compare to agencies without orderliness. In this manner, peace is at hand because there may not be violent manner of dealing with people. But sometimes, the problem is with the authorities. Some abuse their power and push only the things that they can take advantage of. Also, some tend to become rebellious and try to grab some property for their own good.

That is what usually the problem here in our country most of the terrorist are fighting for territorial rights. They just believe that Mindanao is the land for Muslims, and they want to conquer it by doing rebellious acts, harming and killing the innocent, bombing, kidnapping and fighting against the armed forces of the Philippines.

Respecting each other's rights is already a great contribution to human rights which can simply starts from our classrooms and most especially at home. We all know that great things come from small things. Why not start doing the small things now so that we can enjoy the great things in the near future.