PEACE for me means a passion to share, to serve. A compassion for the world's crippled and maimed. It is an embrace, a crucifixion, yet a freedom to be. Peace can fade away, evanescent. Peace is a flame in the heart searing, perjuring.

As I understood the word human rights it barley occur to my mind that it refers to the rights and freedom to which all humans are entitled." Proponents of the concept usually assert that everyone is endowed with certain entitlements merely by reason of being human.

Further, I read about some articles regarding the rights of human, article reproduces the declaration in which the set out of the specific human rights. Everyone is entitled to all the rights and freedoms stated in this declaration, without distinction of any kind, such as race, color, sex, language, religion, political or other opinion, national or social origin, property, birth or other status.

You have to be charge as an innocent until you're not proven to be guilty, until the case is still flowing because that is stated in the law. The principle applies to everyone in relation to all human rights and freedoms and it prohibits discrimination by sex, race, and color and nationality. At the individual level, while we are entitled our human rights, we should also respect the human. Because we are now people of democracy and way of life, let not freedom be just about documents or governments' rule. Make it about the things we do every day that contribute to society and make earth a better place to live.

Talking about peace I have been told by some people that achieving peace by the year 2020 is not a believable goal. With that we must get more focused, and that peace is not a quantifiable thing, it is something intangible. Peace has different meanings to many different people. Peace is something that lies in giving away rather than taking or receiving. Peace is something which understands only in one language "silence" which is best of expressions. So, if you have nothing to say nice, don't day anything so that peace will prevail.
