When we say peace, Human Rights goes with it. To live in peace, we should be optimistic and should treat everyone fairly. To live free, we must be open to other culture and avoid discriminations. All of us have the right to express our own beliefs, language and be proud of what we are. Being proud means fighting for our rights as to whatever we got.

Peace is what the world needs but sometimes, the government whom we lay our trust are the one causing the conflict. When violation of human rights is committed, uprising is more certain.

Fortunately, there are agencies like Commission on Human Rights that could help us fight and protect our rights. Women and children are given priority too.

A single step at a time, peace can be attained through the joined effort of citizens and concern agencies. Let's give peace a chance for a better world for the next generation.
