Every individual has rights. A right to freedom, just and equal privileges and it is the role of the state to make sure that all people have an equal opportunity to practice this privileges despite of race, religion, and sex of an individual therefore we individual are guided by law but does everyone has equality and freedom when it comes to human rights? There are a lot of issues before regarding the discrimination of the rights of other races and sex and one example of that is the superiority of white Americans to the black Americans, they don't have the freedom and the opportunity to used their rights as a human being and even women before has no opportunity to practice their rights and good thing the government or the state already make an change to have an equal rights in the society and prohibited racial and gender discrimination in public places and employment. Though racial and gender discriminations nowadays are rarely practiced but there is still injustices situation that is being done most commonly to those less fortunate individuals when it comes to wealth. Justice is never achieved if money, power and position come along. It is the state or the authorized person in the government who ensures equal rights and justice but sad to say most of them fails to practice in providing fair and equal privileges especially to those deprived individuals because of poverty. Thus this only means that justice and equality are only favor for the wealthy being and to those persons in a higher position? Then I guess life is unfair after all. These days Money, power and position matters after all.

It is also assumed that we have this right to individual liberty that guarantees the freedom of speech, religion, press and choice with limitations on the power of the state to restrain or dictate the actions of an individual but complete unrestricted freedom of action would make peaceful human existence impossible, some restraints on freedom of action are necessary and inevitable. Freedom is defined as the right of individuals to act without restraint as long as their actions do not interfere with the equivalent rights of others. When it comes to freedom everyone are privileged but if is not restricted people might over used their freedom and lead to an unpeaceful situation so person's values play an important role regarding this issue We, individuals as well must know our limitations and not to over used our privileges.

Our human rights our guided by law in which it informs us about our rights and as well as the limitations. Our ethics are much also important in by means of our rights and privileges. We are created equally by GOD and we should treat others equally with just and fair treatment regardless the status and disposition of a person.
