When we say human rights it talks about the rights of each person, the things that each person can do, the freedom for everybody to do and give their own opinions. The basic rights and freedoms, to which all humans are entitled, often held to include the right to life and liberty, freedom of thought and expression, and equality before the law. The human rights law centre is committed to the promotion and protection of human rights and the establishment and strengthening of the rule of law worldwide. Human rights which some hold to be inalienable and belonging to all humans. They are necessary for freedom and the maintenance of freedom of reasonable quality of life.

In a world where multinational corporations are increasingly more powerful than the governments that are supposed to represent and protect their citizens, the argument that economic rights are also human rights must be made as urgently as ever. After all, when 51 of the 100 largest economies in the world are corporations, not countries, company managers are just as likely as any callous dictatorship to brutalize people. Human rights groups don't just need a renewal of purpose, but also a change of direction.

Respect on human rights this is how to respect others rights. We need to respect each everyone so that we will have a world peace without respecting to each other maybe the world now is under war, using the international language we can show to other country that we respect them. We will be having a world peace if everybody respects each human right. World peace means an ideal of freedom peace, and happiness among and within all nations and/or peoples. World peace is a utopian idea of planetary non-violence by which nations willingly cooperate, either voluntarily or by virtue of a system of governance that prevents warfare. Although the term is sometimes used to refer to a cessation of all hostility among all individuals, world peace more commonly refers to a permanent end to global and regional wars with future conflicts resolved through nonviolent means.
