

Individual Human Rights

By: Wella Amor A. Batocael

School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

All individual has its own human rights. Human rights are a special sort of inalienable moral entitlement. They attach to all persons equally, by virtue of their humanity, irrespective of race, nationality, or membership of any particular social group. They specify the minimum conditions for human dignity and a tolerable life. Statements about human rights are normative and prescriptive. Critics reject the idea of universality, or allege particular accounts are ideological or culture-specific.

Everyone can apply or practice their human rights when we say human rights, what will be the first thing goes in our mind? Human right its self means the right of all individual to do things they want to say what they want to say and others. It's the freedom of all individual. We humans have the right or the freedom to choose, to vote, to judge, to speak of, to be heard, to protect ourselves from other but all this right sometimes can't practice because of other people, who has a the higher power than us ordinary people.

Now a day many people or we may say almost all Pilipino people doesn't anymore practice their individual rights. We can practice those rights because of some policies or some regulation in our nation. Their so many barriers when we talk about our human rights.

Just like in our government they always emphasized that "our nation is a democratic country and people have their own freedom" but when it comes to politics especially during election day, most people are afraid to practice a fair and clean election, because some Politian uses their power by giving money to the people to vote for them and by treating their opponents if they will try to go against them. Other thing, it is the right of the people to protect themselves from other to fight for themselves but in the end people who fight loses.

Everyone deserves to be respected by the others; they have the right to refuse anything that is against their own will of choice, but people fail to receive this right because some of them don't respect the right of the others too.