Discrimination has a long major issue around the world, most especially on the basis of their belief or religion.

Ethnic communities have often used religion to express their identity and until now there has been no specific protection against discrimination for most religious groups.

There is still widespread ignorance and indifference towards religion and in organizational settings this may allow 'unwitting' and institutional discrimination to thrive.

It is not good to be treated unequally as for what a person's religion is, sometimes we find difficult to find jobs or be in a new community especially if you are a muslim like me. If you go abroad there is this specific place that you are suit in, like in a muslim countries such as Saudi Arabia, Egypt, Brunei and so on.

How about when you are interested to work in countries were Christian people are more dominant there is always and sometimes hesitation, some results would be refusing to promote someone because of her religion, refusing to allow her access to company benefits, or firing her on the basis of her religion. It's really a big disappointment to us and other religion. A person can also experience this type of mistreatment because she/he does not have a religion.

As for my opinion, we first need to recognized and understand carefully the different tradition or culture of religion, respect the rights of people and freedom to express for what they practice, because all of us are fairly treated by our almighty god. We should recognized ones human rights, own feelings, beliefs and attitudes that are discriminatory, try and step back before you judge someone and see things from their view for a moment.

If this discrimination are long vanish there will be more peace and love around the world, there will be free from hatred and can move freely.
