

What It Means To Me

By: Fatima Abegail F. Abdurahman

School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

Yesterday, I saw clear, clean and calm water flowing in the river, where fishes play, reproduce and grow. Every creature in this river is living harmoniously. When the sun is up, this place shines like crystals and when the night comes it is like diamond in the dark. Nevertheless, it is a place worth living for.

Today, I can see river clear as grease, clean as soot and calm as thunder. Fishes stops to play, start to evacuate, there is no safe place any more. It is as harmonious as bombings. When the morning shines no more crystals and when night comes you can see flashy lights of attacking mortars.

Tomorrow, I don't know what I will see. Will it be better or it will be worse? Hence tomorrow is what we will be making today. They say that change is the most prominent thing in this world. I believe it is. If differences in culture and barriers will continue to reign, no water will flow again, instead meat and blood will run in our rivers. If we want to change what is going on right now then I think we should have our "Game Plan", learn, live, and love it. Learn to accept differences and eradicate barriers. Live life without discrimination, and love like you have never been hurt before.

In this flight, we still have a lot of tremors to meet, difficulties that can help us to become stronger individuals. Let us make the most of what we have today rather than jeopardizing each one of us, aiming for the same goal. PEACE. This is what it means to me.