

Defining the Right to Education

By: Sahi, Shermina

Department of Civil Engineering
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

It is universally accepted that the right to education is a must and a right to every individual. It is a tool to grow as a person. Ever since it is recognized by the universal declaration of human rights, it implement 90% all over the world, however there are still a room for changes and improvement although the vast majorities of our countries has sign up to the end or complied. Few have integrated his right into National Constitutions or provide the legislative and administrative frameworks to ensure that the Right for Education are realistic in practice. Many still yet under the delusion that the right exists along the assumptions that the user should do this right in order undermining the very concept of a right in other word the right exist in theory but there is no capacities to compliments this right into practice for free.