

My Say on Human Rights

By: Abdulla, Al-Jamiel
Department of Civil Engineering
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

Human Rights in the Philippines have set a larger part of limitations unto people who can't afford in life especially to those people who committed crime. It states that a person who is not convicted guilty to the crime he committed and still considered as innocent, and a person who is still a suspect. His right to exercise his rights to remain silent, have an attorney of the government must provided him a public attorney if he can't afford right to bail and to know his other rights.

Unfortunately, these rights are seldom delivered to those people who are considered as unwealthy people but being imposed very well to the rich ones. This type of human rights is subjected to checks and balances. Checks and balances according to the rule of law. But as we have observed though the news and headlines, most of this rights are taken for granted by those people who and supposed to give us these rights but unfortunately being utilized by them for personal interest.

The government should provide security to the state as being stated in the constitutional law but sad to say, that the governments are the one who is creating terrorism and harm to the state. Police power is the capacity of the state to regulate behaviors and enforce order within its territory. But usually being manifested by the security people beyond the limited prohibitions specified and the constitution of the state.

As to experience, I for I did not even enjoy or feel my rights as a citizen of the Philippines. Most of the police authority shows the real to everyone else. Shouldn't the securities be kind and friendly to the massive people whom they vowing to serve for the country? But not, they appear to be violent and sometimes arrogant with their uniforms. This kind of authority is way too different from the U.S.A. police academy that they show kindness to the people and letting them feel security within the state.

Philippine human rights are not just about you and against the world. It's between you and the people whose supposed to give you these rights for you to exercise.