

My Window Shopping

By: Darwina Bentick

Department of Civil Engineering
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

What a horrible day. I and my friend agree to unwind because it was such a disaster day, just finished our brain breaking exam. We went to malls and department stores. We looked on dresses, shoes, stuff toys; it is a way of relaxation for us. But then this particular department store we entered, we noticed the security guard following us. He then confronts us and asked us to go away as if we are bad elements. He was very annoying. That one example of violating human rights, he doesn't have the right to embarrassed. Are we not customers? Even we just making window shopping we are still consider customers and we have rights not just customers but as human beings.