There Will Be Peace

By: Ranie G. Sumicad, BS in Radiologic Technology
School of Allied Medicine (SAM)
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

Just like poverty, corruption and other things that mess up our world, chaos is one of them and I think it is very hard or impossible to achieve true peace. Because of our opinions, religions and basically our beliefs and perception. I think the only way to reduce chaos in our within ourselves and around us is try to understand peoples points of view no matter how taboo it is. If we want to make peace with civilians who are going to war there is nothing we can do but to negotiate and try to stop them. But we can prevent it because chaos is a disease in society and it always start in our parents teaching their children. A bad fruit comes from a bad tree and insects can make a fruit bad and that is how it is. If we will take action and advice future parents to take responsibility to a full extent.

We can always make seminars on new parents about how to control kids. But what if I am just a kid and trying to make peace will I make a difference? The answer is yes kids can make a huge difference. Peers are very influential that's why riots are made up of group of people there are no riots with one man attack. The catch is if you can change your peer's perceptions by becoming a role model you can make peace. If I can change people's perception to think that getting higher grades can give you higher chances of getting a higher salary job then why can you. The point is everyone can change a person's perception it's just a matter if we want to do it or not.

I am not the only one who should show peace to chaotic people but we should show them that there is a better way to live life. We cannot diminish chaos it's just like trying to say there is no hell when we try to diminish chaos. But we can always lessen it and try to control it. It always starts from us and how we control ourselves usually anger. Every minute someone dies because of mindless aggression, come to think of it it's kind of stupid that someone will kill a person without any reason other than anger. I hate angry people I do not like being with them but there is nothing we can do other than to accept its part of society and we must accept that there is no true peace it is just temporary and impossible to retain.

One person can make a difference but it is short lives. We make the difference no one can work alone to make a difference. One policeman can only make a difference in his position but it is the organization of cops that makes a lot of difference. We make peace with other countries so that we do not start a war but why do we still make weapons of mass destruction. I might make a difference within the people around me but it is not only I that should try and give peace a chance it is also you.