Like human rights the student also has their rights in school. They have the rights, because they were the ones that will learn.

All students have the rights to ask their teachers about the remarks given to them. The example here is, when a student got a remark that is failed, that teacher should explain to the student why she/he had given that failed remark. Another is, when a student will ask about a certain lesson that she/he didn't understand, for the student will completely understand they must ask a question to the teacher in a given topic. For the student will also enhance on ability to cope up to the given topics. It is not also fair for the student to be embarrassed about his/her mistakes that she/he have done in front of his/her co-student. Because sometimes there are teachers thought that the student will learn because of that. Some teachers are late and to think that her students are already hungry.

I had an experience of having a conflict with a teacher when I was in grade 1. I was absent on that day, on the next day the teacher punished me by letting me stand in front of the class for about 3 hours. Every student has a right to speak, even you are under the shade of the teacher that is authoritarian, and we have the rights to say what we feel.
