Human Rights in Health

Tacbobo, Sheva
School of Education Arts and Science
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City

Health is the general condition of a person in all aspects. It is also a level of functional and/or metabolic efficiency of an organism, often implicitly human.

Health is really important to us, because if we have unconditional body we cannot do want we want and we cannot serve our family. So maintaining of good health is really important having an exercise everyday for good body and mind.

For example of human rights in health, is some of the hospital are giving unfair services, like for example, prioritizing the elite once, it is very unfair for the poor once, like what I experience, our grandfather is having a critical conditioned, but they saw that we are suffering for financial problem, so they priorities first the elite once, it is obvious that they are unfair in serving people. Instead of having fair treatment they don't have that fair system.

And to those who are poor once who in need of medication, organization must have once a month of free dental and medical consultation. It is because they cannot afford it. This is the only way to help them and they have also the right to have it.

Like for example mercy killing, comatose patients, cancer patients, which are under critical condition and they only waiting for their last breathe, it is a human rights to do what they want.