The Right to Live

Everyone is born free and has equal rights and dignity. All of us are given the right to live in accordance not just by the law, but because we are the creations of the Almighty God. For instance, in the case of abortion, no one has the right to kill an unborn child. The unborn baby should be cared by the mother while inside the womb, and must be given the right to see the world. Every individual has its own dignity, and that is we have the right to be treated the way we wanted to be.

The Right to Vote

The right to vote is the most fundamental right of citizenship. Voting is one of the most decisive ways that a person can influence governmental decision-making. It is a formal term of preference for a candidate for office that generally takes place in the context of election. The right to vote must actually be valued and since this right is valued, then it must be thought to have the power to make a difference. Aside from that, since we are living in a democratic country, thus, we have our freedom to choose who will be the leaders in particular positions that they are running for.

The Right to Education

The right to education is renowned as a human right and is recognized to establish primary education for all children, to develop secondary education, as well as equitable access to higher education. Through education, we are creating our “voices” through which rights can be claimed and protected. If a person is educated, they can be able to develop their skills, capacity, as well as confidence in themselves. Through this right, we are given the chance to live life full of success and achievements that will lead us to attain self-actualization.
