

Human Rights: Respect for Others

Amirah F. Jumahali

Bachelor of Science in Nursing

School of Allied and Medicine

Universidad de Zamboanga

We as individuals have different attitude and personalities. We are raised and molded by our parents to become a good person and respectful towards other people. In our country, we show respect by saying "Po" and "Opo". Such respect exists within us and is considered inherent. We must respect one another's opinion and the right to argue in defense of our opinion to make other people aware that they must respect your wishes and your ideas.

We must have the virtue of patience and understanding to have a peaceful relationship with others around us. We must also show interest to what they do and say. We must respond positively towards other people as well to gain their respect.