

Human Rights

Arwa A. Mistul

Bachelor of Science in Nursing

School of Allied and Medicine

Universidad de Zamboanga

Rights and freedom to which all humans are entitled are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood. Human rights are inherent to each one of us regardless of nationality, residence, sex, religion and status. We are all equally entitled to our rights without discrimination.

Our human rights obligation is to protect individuals and groups against abuses. There are rights that require the provision of education to all children and the protection against poverty and starvation. We must be aware of our rights to protect ourselves from people who will do us harm. There are so many rights that we have to be aware of and must strive to learn about to protect us and our family.