

Human Rights on Education

Charisse Faith V. Tabien
College of Business Management
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

Before I proceed to my reaction, let me first define education. Education in the largest sense is any act or experience that has a formative effect on the mind, character or physical ability of an individual. In its technical sense, education is the process by which society deliberately transmits its accumulated knowledge, skills and values from one generation to another.

From the news article above, human rights of the people when it comes to education is very important to fight for. It is because only education can help our people in expanding their knowledge. School and universities which are supported by the government is very important especially to those poor families who can't afford to send their children in school. If they (the gov't) will not support or will decrease their financial support in these said institutions, there will be limited slots for those poor students who wish to have a good education.

The government must know that education is the only key which will help open new doors (opportunities) for our society. So, the government must work with this and do something so that they can give unlimited opportunities for our people especially to us, students.