

HUMAN RIGHTS

BSN Student: Ahari, Nur-sia H.
School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga Ciyt, Philippines

Human rights are rights inherent to all human beings, whatever our nationality, place of residence, sex, national or ethnic origin, religion, language, or any other states. We are all equally entitled to our human rights without discrimination. These rights are all interrelated, interdependent and indivisible. All human rights are indivisible, whether they are civil and political rights such as the right to life equality before the law and freedom of expression. Human rights entail both rights and obligation. States assume obligations and duties under international law to respect to protect and to fulfill rights as a human we must respect one another and avoid criticism or judgment without knowing them. The obligation to respect more that state must refrain from interfering with or curtailing the enjoyment of human rights and also as a human seeing the right of one individual we need to respect them and also to protect them from bad things. The obligation to protect requires states to protect individuals and groups against human rights abuses human rights are rights and freedom to which all human are entitled.