Human rights are "rights and freedoms to which all humans are entitled." Proponents of the concept usually assert that everyone is endowed with certain entitlements merely by reason of being human.<sup>1</sup> Such entitlements can exist as shared norms of actual human moralities, as justified moral norms or natural rights supported by strong reasons, or as legal rights either at a national level or within international law

We, the human being have our own rights and privacy in our life. We are created in this world equally by Our Almighty God. That's why as a human being we have the rights to be respected and to be treated very well. And because of that laws and regulation are created in this world. So, that each of us will have the chance to speak out and fight for our rights. But then, in reality rights and justice is only for some not for everyone. In this world we cannot really remove the fact that there are such people who are very fortunate in their lives and there are also who are unfortunate. Most especially in this generation, poverty arises in each country of the world and inequality is shown.

So, the people who have power (money) has always the rights and get justice easily, it's as if justice is already in their hands now. While the people who are poor / the people don't have any power doesn't even get the chance to speak out and fight for their own rights. Because of many situations that are happenings in this world, I can say now that justice is not for everyone and it is really bad because each of us has the freedom to speak for our rights.

"All human beings are born free and equal in dignity and rights. They are endowed with reason and conscience and should act towards one another in a spirit of brotherhood."
