Every morning when you wake up, all you can hear is the chirping of the birds outside your window, all you can smell is the newly watered flowers that bloomed under the bright yellow sun, when you stepped outside your house, all you can hear is the sweet greetings of your neighbors, and the only thing you can see is the clean street, trees swaying with the pollution free air, children playing around without their parents getting worried because the neighborhood is a child friendly community, the people are well disciplined that everything they do helps the community to progress, the people are well educated that they understand each other, and when there is understanding among people, there is unity, and when there is unity there is peace, cause the root of war is misunderstanding, people think they aren't equal so they wanted to gain power by conquering other people's land, show other people that they can kill and by doing these, it makes them feel that they are powerful in which they are all wrong, cause the only person who is powerful is God.

Peace, it is what everybody wants and this is how I define peace and this is how I wanted my world to be. Once peace is attained maybe perfection will be resulted and the only tasks we'll be all asked to do is maintain it and enjoy it.
