

Human Rights

Aida Habi

School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

As defined by various sources, Human Rights is the freedom to which all humans are entitled. Human right developed after the 2nd World War thereby as a call for peace. All human being are being born free and equal in dignity and rights as they say. Human Rights is vital in sustaining quality of life and such right cannot be simply trashed or denied because the right to live and born free is inherent to each one of us. It is also described by some as universal moral rights, something which all men desire to have; something that one cannot be deprived of but it is not an absolute freedom.

There are many forms of human rights like human right to own property, right to equal protection of law, right to freedom of movement and residence, including the right to leave any country and to ones country, right to freedom of opinion and expression. But this is something that we are still trying to attain each day as we live because this right is not that enjoyed by most.

May the government look closer and strengthen the implementation and practice of each individual's rights.