

HUMAN RIGHTS
Labastida, Desiree C.
School of Allied Medicine
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

One of the most important characteristic of a person is his ability to know his /her right so-called human rights. HUMAN RIGHTS is a supreme, inherent, inalienable rights of man as a human being and those in which he may legally inherit or acquire by title as necessary to his life, liberty, dignity, and self-development including those that may happen to him in the course of his existence. These human rights are under the Philippines Constitution that is abided by the law.

So far, there are 2 classifications that human rights constitute and that provides as guidelines to every human being and also contemplates an unborn child who has not yet seen the light of day. This could be civil and political rights and the other one is economical, social and cultural rights.

For me, as a student, I have the right to be educated in an institution that could enhance my knowledge, develop my skills and mold my personality. In such essence of right I can manage myself to be a good citizen to our country, a good fellowman and a good follower to our GOD. Professionals like doctors, lawyers, teachers, journalist, and other non-professionals like indigenous people, uneducated, and tribal groups have their own rights.

Consequently, every Filipino ought to know his human rights. Anyone of us is protected by the constitution and other statutory laws. He would then recognize the fact that others are equally entitled to the same rights and freedom. Therefore, in the exercise of our rights, we must do so with honesty and good faith so that we may not violate the human rights and freedom of others. We should put in our mind that everything we do has its limitations.