

HUMAN RIGHTS

Yusop

College of Information Technology and Technical Education
Universidad de Zamboanga
Zamboanga City, Philippines

All of the human beings have their own human rights. As it was defined by certain authors, human rights pertain to the rights and freedom to which all human are entitled. In a state, laws from higher authorities are imposed. But these laws are intertwined with the rights of the people of the state. It must conform to the right of every individual.

Each person has its freedom to live a life full of equal treatment. One of the most basic human rights is that, each person needs to have its own identity. The name itself is an example. Human also has the right to have proper education as well as the right to make decision. Since before the human rights have conflicts due to colonization, today the human rights was finally solved and brought to equality by the individuals.

We are all equally entitled to our human rights without discrimination. These rights are all interrelated, interdependent and indivisible. It is interrelated in the sense that it conforms to the implemented laws of the state. The Philippine government is now governed democratically that leads its people to achieve their own rights such as to live with the right of freedom.

Submitted by:

YUSOP J. ASANJI

BSCE – II